iRobot Roomba 115X Combo Robot Vacuum & Mop with AutoEmpty Dock

Both versions share the same 3-stage suction brush, vibrating mop pad, and iRobot’s PrecisionVision navigation.

The AutoEmpty Dock adds a sealed bag that holds up to 60 days of debris, emptying the bin after each run.

As of October 4, 2026, the docked model sells for $199.99 (down from $469.99) while the dock-less version is $139.99 (down from $319.99).

Check current price for the Roomba 115X Combo with AutoEmpty Dock.

For busy households, the dock saves you the 30-60 second manual empty after each cycle and keeps dust contained.

The dock’s bag is replaceable; a typical replacement costs $12.99 and lasts about two months with average use.

If you prefer to avoid ongoing bag costs and don’t mind a quick manual empty, the dock-less model saves $60 upfront and eliminates the recurring expense.

Maintenance is identical for both: replace the filter every two months ($8.99) and clean the brush as needed.

The dock adds a modest footprint (≈7 inches wide) but provides a tidy charging station.

Shark AI Ultra vs. Roomba 115X: Navigation, Suction & Mopping Showdown

Shark’s AI Ultra uses a laser-based LiDAR system plus dual-camera AI for obstacle detection.

The Roomba 115X relies on iRobot’s PrecisionVision (camera-only) navigation.

In real-world floor plans, LiDAR maps a full house in under 5 minutes, whereas the camera-only approach takes 7-8 minutes.

Suction power on the Shark AI Ultra rates higher, making it better for thick carpets and pet hair.

The Roomba 115X still delivers strong performance on hard floors and includes a vibrating mop pad for light mopping.

Both units support app scheduling, voice control via Alexa/Google, and receive regular firmware updates.

If you value hands-free convenience and a clean-look charging station, go with the Roomba 115X Combo with AutoEmpty Dock.
