What the 2026 Robot-Vacuum Market Looks Like

In 2026 the space splits into premium self-emptying models and mid-range units that still pack strong suction and mopping. Brands tout AI navigation, bigger suction numbers, and hybrid vacuum-mop designs, making it tough to separate genuine usefulness from marketing hype.

Roomba 115X Combo vs. Roomba 115X Combo with AutoEmpty Dock

iRobot Roomba 115X Combo Robot Vacuum & Mop with AutoEmpty Dock

The base Roomba 115X Combo sells for $139.99 and includes a 3000 Pa suction motor, a vibrating mop pad, and iRobot’s Imprint Smart Mapping that learns up to three floor plans.

The AutoEmpty Dock version adds a sealed bin that automatically empties the robot’s dustcup into a larger base-station bag, priced at $199.99—a $60 premium.

Owner feedback from the last six months shows:

- Base model users with pets or larger homes empty the dustcup every 2–3 days.
- Dock users can go up to 30 days before the bag needs changing.
- The dock reduces dust exposure, a point highlighted by allergy sufferers.

If you value minimal hands-on maintenance and don’t mind spending the extra $60, the AutoEmpty Dock pays for itself in saved time and convenience.

Shark AI Ultra Robot Vacuum – Key Specs and 2026 Positioning

Shark AI Ultra Robot Vacuum

The Shark AI Ultra lists for $249.99 (price checked Oct 4 2026) and emphasizes AI-driven laser navigation that creates detailed room maps and avoids obstacles in real time.

It also advertises:

- Up to 2700 Pa suction (slightly lower than the Roomba’s 3000 Pa)
- Self-cleaning brush roll to reduce hair wrap
- Compatibility with SharkClean app for scheduling and zone cleaning

While its navigation is impressive, the lack of an integrated mopping function and a higher price put it a step behind the Roomba 115X Combo with AutoEmpty Dock for users who want both vacuum and mop in one hands-free package.

Decision Framework: Which Model Fits Your Home?

Ask yourself:

1. Do you want mopping as well as vacuuming? → Choose a Roomba 115X Combo variant.
2. Is emptying the dustbin a chore? → The AutoEmpty Dock saves you weekly effort.
3. Are you sensitive to dust or allergies? → The sealed dock reduces exposure.
4. Do you prioritize the latest laser navigation over mopping? → The Shark AI Ultra is a solid vacuum-only option.

For most households that value convenience, pet-friendly cleaning, and a true vacuum-mop combo, the iRobot Roomba 115X Combo with AutoEmpty Dock delivers the best balance of performance, price, and hands-free operation.
