Picture Quality Face-Off

All three sets deliver 4K UHD resolution, but the way they produce light differs.

The INSIGNIA models use conventional LED back-lighting. They give adequate brightness for light-to-moderate rooms, yet their contrast and black levels are limited compared with Mini-LED.

The LG LX7B employs Mini-LED with local-dimming zones. This technology sharpens blacks in dark scenes, improves gradient smoothness, and boosts peak HDR brightness—making it the stronger choice for a cinematic experience in a darkened living room.

Value, Design & Smart Features

If shelf space is at a premium, the 50-inch INSIGNIA fits easily on most stands while still delivering a solid 4K picture at under $160. The 75-inch INSIGNIA offers a massive screen for under $360, ideal for large rooms where budget is the main driver.

The LG LX7B, though priced near $900, adds a premium Gallery Mode that displays artwork when the TV is off, a sleek thin bezel, and LG’s webOS platform with voice control via LG ThinQ. Its smart features feel more responsive and its app ecosystem is broader than the Fire TV interface on the INSIGNIA sets.

Which TV Fits Your Needs?

- Best value & compact: INSIGNIA 50\" F50 – lowest price, decent picture for everyday viewing.
- Biggest screen for the buck: INSIGNIA 75\" F50 – massive size, still under $400.
- Cinematic picture & premium design: LG 55\" LX7B Gallery Mini-LED – superior contrast, HDR, Gallery Mode, and refined smart TV experience.
