Mini LED vs Standard LED: Picture Performance

Mini LED technology, as seen in the LG LX7B, packs many more tiny backlight zones than a conventional LED panel. This extra granularity lets the LG achieve deeper blacks, higher peak brightness, and more precise local dimming—resulting in a picture that pops in both dark scenes and bright highlights.

Standard LED panels (the Insignia models) still deliver solid 4K clarity and HDR10, but with fewer dimming zones you’ll notice less contrast in high-dynamic-range content. If you mostly watch daytime TV or casual gaming, the Insignia sets provide excellent value.

Which TV Fits Your Budget and Viewing Habits?

- Budget-conscious streamer: The 50" Insignia at $159.99 gives you 4K, HDR10, and Fire TV smart features for under $160.
- Big-screen family movie night: Step up to the 75" Insignia for $359.99—still under $400, with a massive screen for immersive viewing.
- Performance-focused gamer/cinephile: The LG Mini-LED bundle at $899.99 adds Dolby Vision, superior contrast, and a stylish white-frame design that doubles as décor.
