that aren't in the list. But I need to cover all 6 products. Let's re-read carefully: "Write the full article body for 'Best Mechanical Keyboards 2026: A Detailed Comparison Guide' about mechanical-keyboards. Products: [list] Outline sections: ["Introduction", "What to Look For in a Mechanical Keyboard", "Feature Comparison Across Models", "In-Depth Review: Redragon K668 108-Key Hot-Swap Wired RGB", "In-Depth Review: Redragon Mechanical Gaming Keyboard Wired", "In-Depth Review: AULA F75 Pro Wireless Mechanical Keyboard", "Buying Guide: Choosing the Right Model for Your Needs", "Conclusion"]" Maybe the intent is that the three in-depth reviews cover three products, and the other three products (including AULA F99 and Logitech, plus maybe one more) are covered in the Introduction, What to Look For, Feature Comparison, and Buying Guide. But there are 6 products, and only 3 review headings. I think the most reasonable approach is to treat the Feature Comparison section as the place where all products are compared, and each product gets a mini-review format (intro, features, pros/cons, recommendation) within that section or as separate divs under the comparison heading. However, the
