Suction & Mopping: Real-World Results

According to 2026 owner feedback, the Roomba 115X models deliver consistent pickup on carpets and hard floors thanks to their 2,000 Pa suction and dual-rubber brushes that resist hair tangling. The vibrating mop pad adds light-to-moderate wet cleaning; users report it removes dried spills after a single pass when the water tank stays full.

The Shark AI Ultra, while lacking a mop, advertises up to 2,700 Pa suction and a self-cleaning brush roll. Reviewers note stronger pickup on thick rugs and pet hair, but the absence of a mop means you'll need a separate device for wet cleaning.

Smart Mapping & AI Obstacle Avoidance

Both brands use laser-based navigation for efficient room mapping. Shark's AI Ultra adds an onboard camera that helps it recognize and avoid common obstacles like shoes and cords, a feature highlighted in many 2026 reviews as reducing bump-into incidents.

Automation & Convenience: AutoEmpty Dock vs. Manual

The AutoEmpty Dock on the Roomba 115X with dock holds up to 60 days of debris before the bag needs changing, turning empty-bin chores into a monthly task at most.

Without the dock, you'll empty the bin after each cleaning cycle – still simple, but more frequent, especially in pet-friendly homes.

Which Model Matches Your Needs?

Want mopping plus hands-free emptying? Choose the Roomba 115X Combo with AutoEmpty Dock. It gives you wet-floor cleaning and the convenience of a self-emptying base.

Prioritize raw suction on thick carpets and pet hair? The Shark AI Ultra delivers the highest suction spec and AI-driven obstacle avoidance, though you'll need a separate mop for wet cleaning.

Budget-conscious but still want mopping? The Roomba 115X Combo without the dock offers the same suction and mopping performance at a lower price, with manual bin emptying.
