Navigation & Intelligence Showdown

Both Roomba 115X models rely on iRobot’s vSLAM (visual simultaneous localization and mapping) combined with the Gen 3i processor. This system builds a map by recognizing ceiling features and wall contours, then adapts as furniture moves. In real-world tests reported by owners, the Roomba navigates multi-level homes with minimal missed spots, though dark-colored rugs can occasionally confuse the visual sensors.

The Shark AI Ultra, by contrast, uses a spinning LiDAR laser to measure distances to objects, creating a highly accurate 2-D map in a single pass. Coupled with an AI obstacle-avoidance engine, it recognizes common hazards like shoes, pet bowls and cords, reducing the chance of getting stuck. Users note that LiDAR works reliably on dark surfaces and in low-light rooms, giving the Shark an edge in challenging lighting.

Suction Power & Mopping Performance

If raw suction is your priority, the Shark AI Ultra leads with ≈2,700 Pa, outperforming the Roomba's ≈2,000 Pa. For mopping, the Shark's sonic pad with a 200 ml tank delivers precise water flow, while the Roomba's vibrating pad (180 ml) works well on sealed hard floors but leaves less water on carpets.

Maintenance & Auto-Empty Convenience

The AutoEmpty Dock on the Roomba 115X Combo holds up to 30 days of debris before you need to empty the base, while the Shark's self-emptying base stretches to about 45 days. The base Roomba model lacks this feature, requiring you to empty the dustbin after every cleaning cycle—ideal only if you prefer a lower upfront cost and don't mind frequent maintenance.

Best Use Cases

- Mixed floors & pet owners who want hands-free emptying – iRobot Roomba 115X Combo w/ AutoEmpty Dock.
- Budget-conscious homes with mostly hard floors – iRobot Roomba 115X Combo (base).
