Design, Build Quality, and Maintenance

iRobot Roomba 115X Combo – A sleek, 3.5-inch low-profile chassis glides under most furniture. The AutoEmpty dock cuts manual emptying to once a week; the 0.6 L dustbin holds plenty of debris. Noise averages 65 dB, similar to a normal conversation.

iRobot Roomba 115X (no dock) – Same slim body but without the AutoEmpty dock, so you'll need to empty the bin after each run. It's 0.2 lb lighter and a few dollars cheaper.

Shark AI Ultra – Slightly bulkier (4-inch base) to house a larger battery and AI sensors. Weighs 3.8 lb, feels solid, and includes a self-cleaning mop pad that eliminates the need for a water tank.

Price, Ratings, and Real-World Feedback

Prices (checked 2026-10-04) range from $139.99 for the basic Roomba 115X to $249.99 for the Combo with AutoEmpty. All three models hold 4.0-4.4 star averages on major retailers. Users love the convenience of AutoEmpty and AI mapping, but note that the Shark model is louder on hard floors.

Which Model Is Right for You?

- If you have a large home and want the hands-off experience, the Combo + AutoEmpty is the clear winner.
- If you're on a tighter budget or don't mind emptying the bin weekly, the standalone Roomba 115X offers the same navigation and suction at a lower price.
- If you need extra suction power for thick carpet and prefer a built-in mop pad, consider the Shark AI Ultra.
