Robot vacuums automate daily floor care, but selecting the right one hinges on suction strength, navigation intelligence, mopping ability, and ongoing maintenance costs. Below you'll find a side-by-side comparison of iRobot's Roomba 115X combos (standard and Auto-Empty dock version) and Shark's AI Ultra lineup, backed by specs, user ratings, and price data checked November 5, 2026.What is the core dilemma: Value vs. Convenience?The market centers on two philosophies. iRobot offers a modular approach: a base Roomba 115X combo for $139.99 and a premium version with an AutoEmpty dock for $199.99, letting you decide if hands-free dustbin emptying is worth the $60 upgrade. Shark, meanwhile, bundles AI-driven mapping with a higher suction ceiling at $249.99, promising stronger pickup without an extra dock purchase.What are the key differences between iRobot Roomba 115X Combo vs. Shark AI Ultra?Suction Power: Shark AI Ultra claims up to 2500 Pa suction, outperforming the Roomba 115X's 1700 Pa. This matters for thick rugs and pet hair.Navigation: iRobot uses Imprint™ Smart Mapping, learning room layouts over weeks. Shark employs a Matrix-Driven Navigation system that creates real-time maps and adapts to obstacles instantly.Mopping: Both models feature a mop pad, but the Roomba's mop function is paired with a dedicated water reservoir in the AutoEmpty version, allowing simultaneous vacuum-and-mop cycles.Is the AutoEmpty Dock worth the extra cost?The Roomba 115X Combo with AutoEmpty dock eliminates the need to manually empty the 0.5 L bin, reducing maintenance time by roughly 5 minutes per week for a typical 2-hour cleaning schedule. Priced at $199.99 (original $469.99), the dock adds $60 over the base model. If you vacuum daily or have pets shedding heavily, the convenience can offset the price difference; occasional users may find the base $139.99 model sufficient.What does the key feature matrix & price analysis reveal?FeatureRoomba 115X (Base)Roomba 115X + AutoEmptyShark
