Finding the best streaming devices can feel overwhelming when you are staring at a wall of options ranging from $30 sticks to $90 premium boxes. Whether you are looking to upgrade an old "smart" TV that feels sluggish, or you want to turn a basic monitor into a cinematic powerhouse, the decision usually comes down to one brand: Roku.

Roku has mastered the art of simplicity, offering a tiered lineup designed to fit every budget and every screen quality. In this comprehensive comparison, we dive deep into the Roku ecosystem—comparing the HD, Plus, and Ultra models—to help you decide which device deserves a spot behind your television.

What to Look For

Before you click "Buy," you need to consider three critical technical factors that will determine your viewing experience:

- Resolution & HDR: If you have a 4K TV, buying an HD stick is a waste of money. You need a device that supports 4K resolution and high dynamic range formats like HDR10+ or Dolby Vision to see the colors and detail you paid for.
- Connectivity: Modern routers are powerful, but walls and distance matter. Look for devices with "Long-Range Wi-Fi" or Wi-Fi 6 support to prevent buffering during high-bitrate 4K playback.
- Remote Functionality: Do you want a basic remote, or do you need voice search and backlit buttons for late-night viewing? The remote often dictates how "smart" the device feels in daily use.
