Key Decision Factors – Size, Viewing Distance & Room Layout

The right size starts with your viewing distance. For 4K TVs the sweet spot is 1-1.5× the screen diagonal. Use this quick rule:

- 50-inch: sit 4.2-6.3 ft away (50-75 in)
- 55-inch: sit 4.6-6.8 ft away (55-82 in)
- 75-inch: sit 6.3-9.3 ft away (75-112 in)

Measure from your eyes to the screen, make sure the centre of the TV is at eye level, and leave a few inches of clearance for ventilation—especially important for Mini-LED models that run warmer.

Picture Quality Showdown – LED vs Mini-LED

Standard LED (Insignia F50 Series) – edge-lit panel, 4K resolution, peak brightness ~250-300 nits, contrast ≈ 4000:1. Good for daytime viewing in moderately lit rooms, but you may notice slight haloing around bright objects.

Mini-LED (LG LX7B Gallery Series) – full-array local dimming, peak brightness 800-1000 nits, contrast > 20 000:1. Delivers deeper blacks, brighter highlights, and a more cinematic HDR experience—ideal for bright rooms or dedicated home-theater setups.

How to Choose the Right Size for Your Space

Follow these three steps:

1. Measure the distance from your primary seating spot to where the TV will go.

2. Divide that distance by 1.5 (for a relaxed view) or by 1 (for a more immersive feel) to get the ideal screen diagonal.
3. Pick the nearest standard size that matches your budget and room aesthetics.

Example: If you sit 8 ft (96 in) away, $96 \div 1.5 \approx 64$ in → a 55- or 60-inch TV works well; if you prefer a cinema feel, go $96 \div 1 \approx 96$ in → a 75-inch set fills the view.
