Why does comparing TVs matter in 2026?

The 2026 market spans budget-friendly LED sets to premium Mini-LED models with art-frame designs. Choosing the right screen influences viewing comfort, gaming responsiveness, and how well the TV integrates with your smart home. A clear comparison prevents overpaying for unused features and ensures you don’t miss performance that matters for your room size and habits.

What should you consider when buying a TV in 2026?

- Screen size & viewing distance: Aim for a screen that fills ~30° of your field of view. For an 8-ft distance, a 55- to 65-inch set is ideal.
- Resolution & HDR: 4K UHD is standard; look for HDR10+ or Dolby Vision for brighter highlights.
- Panel technology: Traditional LED LCD offers good brightness; Mini-LED improves contrast and black levels with more local-dimming zones.
- Refresh rate & gaming: 60 Hz works for movies, but 120 Hz with HDMI 2.1 and low input lag benefits gamers.
- Smart platform: Fire TV, webOS, Roku, and Google TV differ in app selection, voice assistants, and update frequency.
- Connectivity: At least three HDMI ports; check for eARC if you plan a soundbar.
- Design & mounting: Thin bezels, VESA compatibility, and unique stands or frame styles affect room aesthetics.
- Price-to-performance: Calculate cost per inch and factor long-term energy use.
