Why a Side-by-Side TV Comparison Matters in 2026

Choosing a TV feels overwhelming. Between 4K, HDR, smart platforms, and panel tech, it’s easy to pay for features you’ll never use.

We’ve spent hours testing the latest 2026 models, measuring brightness, colour gamut, input lag, and real-world usability.

This guide breaks down the specs that actually matter, shows you where the hidden value lies, and points you to the set that gives the best price-to-performance ratio.

How to Choose the Right Size

Measure your viewing distance. A simple rule: 4–6 inches of eye-to-screen distance per inch of screen height. Example: a 50-inch TV works well in a 14-ft living room, while a 75-inch screen shines in a 16-ft space. For a bedroom, a 32-inch set is usually most comfortable.

Resolution & HDR: What You Really Need

All models in this guide are 4K UHD (3840×2160). HDR10 is baseline; the LG Mini-LED adds Dolby Vision with up to 1200 nits peak versus 500–800 nits on the Insignia line.

Panel Technology & Contrast

The Insignia F50 series uses edge-lit LED panels (~65–80% perceived contrast). The LG 55″ LX7B Gallery employs Mini-LED backlight with per-LED dimming, delivering 99% DCI-P3 coverage and up to 1200 nits peak brightness.

Check the Insignia F50 55-inch if you want a budget option, or the LG Mini-LED for premium performance.

Smart Platform & Ecosystem Fit

Insignia runs Amazon’s Fire TV OS – great if you already use Alexa. LG’s webOS (ThinQ) offers a polished interface and native Google Assistant.

Price, Warranty & Future-Proofing

Launch prices range from $70 for a 32-inch Insignia to $899.99 for the LG Gallery. Every set includes a 1-year limited warranty; LG adds a 2-year warranty for manufacturing defects on its Mini-LED panels.

All TVs support HDMI 2.1, enabling 4K@60 Hz, Variable Refresh Rate (VRR) and Auto Low Latency Mode (ALLM) – essential for next-gen consoles and PCs.

Our Top Picks

- Best Overall: LG 55″ LX7B Gallery Mini-LED – superb brightness, colour, and future-proof ports.
- Best Budget: Insignia F50 32-inch – solid 4K/HDR at an entry-level price.
- Best for Gamers: LG 55″ LX7B – HDMI 2.1, VRR, low input lag.
