What should you look for when buying a TV in 2026?

In 2026 the TV market splits into three clear camps:

- Budget-friendly large screens with Fire TV integration
- Mid-size sets that prioritize design and sound
- Premium Mini-LED models that deliver cinema-grade contrast

Your decision hinges on room size, viewing habits, and how much you value built-in voice assistants versus a furniture-like aesthetic. The following sections compare the Insignia 50" and 75" F50 Series LED TVs against the LG 55" LX7B Gallery Mini LED to show where each excels.

How to choose the right TV for your space

1. Measure your viewing distance – aim for a screen size where the diagonal is about one-third of the distance.
2. Consider ambient light – Mini-LED handles bright rooms better than standard LED.
3. Think about sound – if you don’t plan to add a soundbar, prioritize built-in speaker wattage.
4. Decide on smart platform – Fire TV offers extensive app LG webOS provides a polished UI and better integration with LG soundbars.
5. Set your budget and compare price-per-inch to ensure you’re getting the most screen for your money.

Answering these questions will point you to the model that matches your room, habits, and wallet.

Final recommendation

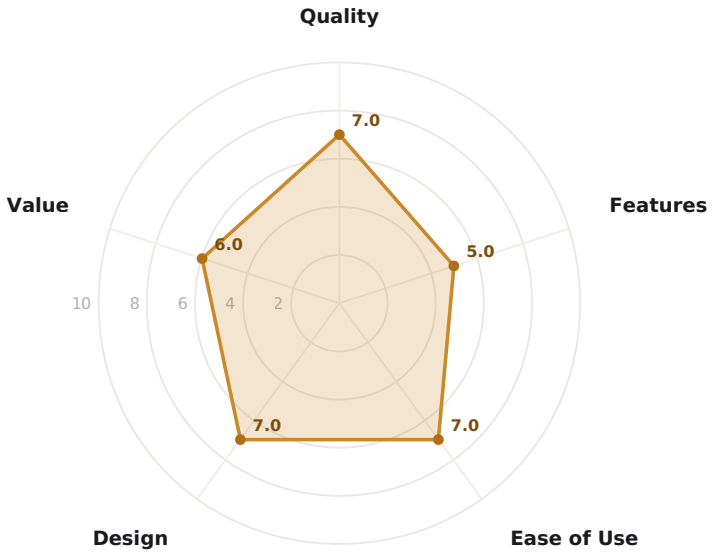

If you need the biggest bang for your buck, go with the Insignia 50" F50 Series. For a bigger screen without breaking the bank, the 75" F50 is the sweet spot. When you want cinema-grade contrast, premium sound, and a design that doubles as wall art, the LG LX7B Gallery Mini LED is worth the investment.
